To the indigenous people of Costa Rica, Panama and Colombia gold had no intrinsic value until it was transformed into a work of art. Only then did it acquire power through the remarkable skills of a master goldsmith. When seeing and holding these magnificent objects we can easily understand why they were considered full of mystery and wonder. They are more than ornaments, though exquisitely ornamental; more than objects of worship, each one possessing it's own magnetism and magic. Imagine, raw gold taken from the soil and fashioned into brilliant jewelry radiant as the sun. Then buried for centuries until returning to the light more glorious than ever. And just as in those distant days when great chiefs and warriors wore their jewelry with pride; they can again be worn or displayed as resplendent treasures, radiating a sensuality and seductiveness that is simply beyond words!
